

When I first started doing the site I put my code in divs.

I then realised I could not make out which divs code had been put into so I redone all of the code and came up with a better alternative.

I added pages for the activities in which the end-user can click on an image in the activity page and be sent to a page containing information about each activity.

I added the about us text on the index/home page. I then added the footer to the bottom of the index page.
